

MORE ON MOVING

Once you've gone through your checklist, here are a few other pointers for you to consider:

If it's special, leave it at home. Your prized possessions are often innocently “borrowed” and innocently lost.

Crime is also an issue on many campuses. If you're considering bringing your 56 carat blue topaz diamond necklace—you know, the one that you like to call “The Heart of the Ocean”—forget about it. You might as well flush it into the heart of the ocean.

Tiny dorm rooms. Now we move into the realm of physics. Since matter occupies space, all matter has volume and impenetrability. This means that no two objects can occupy the same space simultaneously.

For this reason, remember not to overpack. For this reason, remember not to overpack. Should we say it three times?

Dorm rooms are small. You'll want to be creative with storage. The space beneath your bed may be one of your only options. You might want to enlist your handy friend/father to create a loft, which would give you a lot more room. Otherwise, you could just bring really tiny hats, shoes, and clothes.

M.A.S.T.E.R. PLAN

M.A.S.T.E.R. Plan is a weeklong program in August that helps students smoothly transition into college life. Students attend informational sessions; participate in interactive educational workshops that enhance skills for learning, both inside and outside the classroom; enjoy daily events that introduce them to new traditions and help them Catch the Spirit!

Students meet a lot of new people, and showing up on the first day of classes to twenty familiar faces is a whole lot more fun than sitting at lunch all by your lonely self.
